312 / Kenny

Case - Timothy N. Pfeiffer,
Subject - Homicide, New Brunswick, N.J.,
Operative - 312.

November 10, 1922. Continuing on the above matter, Operative did not report for work as usual, but located in the railroad station at New Brunswick, N.J., at 8 a.m.

Operative while at the railroad station entered in conversation with Garry Kenny and a colored boy who is the bootblack there. The colored boy remarked, "Hey, Garry how about that drunk that came along here." Then Garry turning to Operative said, "My brother Danny, and Leo left here that night and drove up to the Wireless Station, and while they were passing in their car, they saw a car up the lane; they did not think anything of it, as one might see a car there anytime during the night with just the rear red light burning. Garry informed Operative that to the best of his knowledge his brother did not hear or see anything, although it was just about the time that the crime was supposed to be taking place. About a week after the murder happened, a funny thing occurred. There was a drunk came through the station and offered several persons a drink, he had a quart bottle on him, he got talking about Phillips' Farm and said how many times he had been up there with some woman, and said that he was up there the night of the murder, with a married woman from Plainfield, and that he had been there several times with her. The drunk spoke about how he knew the ground up there, every inch of it.

After awhile the drunk proceeded upstairs and met Mr. Mason and offered him a drink; somebody phoned to the cops, and it is the impression that it was Mr. Mason. The drunk further went on to say how he had been up to the Phillips' Farm, having left his car up there."

Operative proceeded about town gathering anything in particular, and at about 9.30 p.m. Operative proceeded to the railroad station and boarded a train for New York City, and discontinued.
